TESSIE'S RIVAL LOVERS.

ONE NEAR DEATH, THE OTHER IN JAIL, AND BUE MISSING.

Collapse of a Homanes of the House of Binses in Which Two Dangerous Eastalde Men Strove for the Exclusive Favor of a Young Girl-The Tragte Work of Jealousy Furthered by a Woman Who Wanted to See a Fight for Her Hand.

When "Chubby" Devine first began paying attention to Teaste Grace, the belle of the remarkable House of Blazes at 290 Madison street, the neighbors predicted trouble in the near future. "Chubby's" baptismal name is Henry, and he is a 'longshoreman of 16 Jackson street. He is a great, burly fellow, good natured enough when sober, but inclined to be quarrelsome when drunk. Among those who knew him well he has been in the habit of doing about what he liked, because he was always willing to fight when thwarted, and as a fighter had something of a reputation.

L'ke most considerable figures in east side gallon society. Devine has encountered the po-lice more than once. The biotter of the Delancey street station bears silent evidence to this fact. On July 14, 1894, while living at 355 Madison street, he got very drunk and started out to avenge himself on Policeman Kunta, who, he imagined, had done him wrong. The police man had ordered him and a companion, Franels Brierty of 74 Broome street, to move away from a corner the night before Devine met Briorty while he was looking for Kuntz and told him of his intentions. Briorty insisted on joining him, and the two armed themselves with bricks. They found Kuntz and threw bricks at his head as they came up behind him, until he fell uncon-scious. Both men were arrested, but were releaved in $2,500 bail each. They never were tried. On Sept. 25, 1894, Devine went out driving with a horse and buggy which James J. Hughes, a Brooklyn man, had left for a few moments at a lamp post on Houston street. Again he was arrested, but again he escaped punishment, the complainant failing to appear against

These incidents give a little insight into the general character of the man who had left his companions of the South street saloons to court the prettiest inmate of the House of Blazes. He d du't know that he would have to encounter a man his equal in everything, including strength and fearlessness, before he could be sure of | yard; extra values. Tersio's favor, but even when he was informed that Tessie was Jim Sullivan's girl he didn't show any inclination to change his plans. Jim Sullivan is a married man, while Devine is single but in the House of Blazes a married man is as good as a single one at all times, and he may be better if he happens to have more money.

Suilivan has a considerable reputation as prize fighter, having defeated several middle. weight pugilists in the last few years. His best performance was his victory over Pat Cahili, then the champion amateur middle-weight fighter of America. He has always been known as a bad man to have trouble with, and, like Drine, he is the acknowledged leader of his own particular circle. Sullivan's circle is a little larger than Devine's because he has a sa loos of his own at Montgomery and Monroe streets. On Aug. 1, 1891, Sullivan shot at Policeman Deevy of the Delancey street station while the policeman was trying to arrest him. He was arrested by another policeman, was held in $1,000 ball for trial, and was released Without trial

The neighborhood's opinion of the tragedy to front of the House of Blazes on Friday night was voiced by a young woman friend of Tessie yesterday. She said: Tessle wasn't clever enough to string them th. She had to go and play one against the both She had to go and play one against the other."

This is precisely what Tessis did, and consequently the fight and subsequent shooting. Tessis is tall, sim, light-haired, about 20 years eld, and rather pretty. She was introduced to Bullivan by his bartender, James Foley, who lives directly opposite the House of Blazes. Foley had known the girl long, and one day told Bullivan about her. Suilivan expressed a wish to meether. After that Bullivan became the girl's slave, calling on her constantly and giving her any number of presents. Tessie tiked this, and Sullivan was encouraged to keep it up. Nobody seems to know what Mrs. Suilivan was doing all this time, the neighborhood was too much interested in Sullivan and the girl to give Mrs. Sullivan much thought. The interwas doing all this time, the neighborhood was too nuch interested in Sullivan and the girl to give Mrs. Sullivan much thought. The interest increased two-fold when Devine came, because from the first it was apparent that Devine was agreeable to Tessie. Devine began laking her out, and speat much time at the House of Blazes. Then it was that the neighbors began to look out for trouble. Sullivan called with accustomed regularity, and always possive the same warm welcome from Tessie, but he knew of Devine's attention and was jealous. He tried to get Tessie to give Devine up, but she pated him on the cheek, told him he was a silly thing, and she didn't care a cent for Devine excepting for what she could get out of him. Devine was met with he same argument when he suggested that Tessie give up Sullivan, and for two weeks the men were smiling at each other in their sleeves such confident that he was the favored one and has the other was merely tolerated. Tessie told fallivan not to call when he knew Devine was there. The same little device sufficed to fool bevine, and things might have gone on smeethly but for Tessie's desire to make the men fight were her. Evidently Devine was the favored ones, but Tessie had no idea of letting either man waik away with her. She got this note from Sullivan on Thursday night:

"FRINN TESSIE: I would like to see you togethat as Suclook on the corress of Medican and

"FRIEND TESSIE: I would like to see you to pight at 8 o'clock on the corner of Madison and donigomery atreets. Sure. From your friend. "Send down word if all right."

"Send down word if all right."

This note came in the afternoon, and on Thursday night, at Tesele's request, Devine came to the House of Blazes. At about 8 o'clock Suitivan, having heard nothing from Tesels, decided to walk toward the bouse to see if she had gly idea of keeping the appointment. He met Fuley and half a dozen others on the way, and they told him that Devine was at the house. All decided to go back to Foley's and wait with Suitivan until he got a chance to see and talk to Tesels.

Half an hour later Sullivan was seased with the others in Foley's room, when Devine came it will be others in Foley's room, when Devine could hear the other of the sease and the sease and the sease had read sullivants note to him, and had ben to seed it playfully over to him, telling him to the other and begin to read it aloud, pausing now and then to give vent to a triumphant thickle. Exactly what happened after this it had to say, for half a dozen persons tell half a dozen stories. Anyhow Sullivan and his friends came rushing out and made for Devine, who, with a laugh, waved the note in Sullivan's face and each derively.

Baxter said that Powell was too badly used up to come to court, and was lying in a dangerous condition in the house in front of which the fracas occurred. Canary told Magistrate Crane that he had been engaged by Powell at Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue to drive him to 359 West Nineteenth street, where Mrs. Mary McNamara, a friend of Powell, lives. When the address was reached Powell not only refused to may his fare, but struck him in the face as well. He merely pushed Powell away, and, as Powell was intexicated, he fell and hurt himself in the fail. Mrs. Hugo von Schuster, who lives in the same house with Mrs. McNamara, dealed the firth of Canary's story. She said that Powell asked Mrs. McNamara to change for him a 31 note in order that he might pay Canary the fifty cents due him. Canary did not wait for the change, but without provocation struck Powell on the head, knocking him down. In his fail, Powell's head struck the curb, making a nasty scale wound, and he also fractured his right ankie in his fail. She declared that Powell had not attempted to strike Canary at all.

An Interesting Variation of the Old Story

George H. Gardner, who lives in Park place. Brooklyn, while doing the West End sights at Coney Island on Friday night, made the acquaintance of Miss Eva Stacy of 252 West ride and he readily assented.

Another carriage followed close behind, and when a lonely spot on the Neck road was reached both rigs came to a stop. Miss Stacy jumped out of Gardner's rig into the second carriage and was driven rapidly away. When Gardner recovered from his surprise he found that he had been robbed of his gold watch and $15 in money. and then he gave chase after the other carriage. He overtook it just as two policemen appeared. and had Miss Stacy and her second escort, who and had Miss Stacy and her second escort, who said he was Hart Stacy of 120 Lawrence street, arrested. Mr. Gardner's missing watch was found in the weman's pocket. Miss Stacy and Stagy were held for examination.

Mr. McFlway, an aged visitor from Hudson, N. Y., had an almost similar experience at the Island the same night. James Hobinson, who is said to ball from Brockton, Mass, and Miss Jennie Newton took him in tow and soon relieved him of $80. Mr. McElway hurried to the police station, and the thieves were intercented on their way to Brookiva and locked up. Robinson is supposed to be an escaped convict from Boston.

GREENHORNS ROBBED AT CONEY. THE CHAPMANS AGAIN AT LAW. Mr. Chapman Arrested on His Wife's Com-

The troubles of the Chapman family have not yet ceased. Some three weeks ago Genevieve Chapman drove away from the Chapman man-Thirty-sixth street. She proposed a carriage at $350, and was pursued and overtaken by her husband. He urged her to return, but she again eluded him and drove off. The husband is John Linton Chapman, a wealthy artist. He is twice the age of his wife, who is buxom and pretty, while he is gray who is buxom and pretty, while he is gray bearded. Heretofore he has been trustful, although possibly austere.

His trustfulness led him to entertain a boarder named t ampbell the son of a lawyer.

The day after M s. Chapman's exempade Chapman went to the Merrisania Court and comman went to the Merrisania Court and commissioned that his wife had cloped with Campbell. Mayistrate Mott issued a warrant charging Mrs. Chapman and Mr. Campbell with the larceny of the horse and carriage.

A week later Mrs. Chapman went to court for a warrant against Mr. Chapman, charging him with failing to support her. She was arrested for larceny and Mr. Chapman for abandonment. In court the courte apparently natched up for infront and Mr. Chapman for abandonment. In court the couple apparently patched up their differences and withdraw their complaints against each other, and both were discharged. Yesterday Mr. Phapman was again a prisoner in the Morrisania Court charged with refusing to support his wife.

"I supported her until she abandoned me for another man," Chapman pleaded, and was paroled for examination.
